The Four Questions

One of our newest members, we are pleased to introduce

JENNIFER ("JENN") COHEN

"Jenn grew up in New York City where she and Sandy met and started their family. Though she is often "cawt" still saying words like "cawfee", and "tawk", she has made St. Louis her home since 2013. When she is not multi-tasking between her 3 energetic boys, her military husband, and her job as an office manager at a chiropractor's office, she is, well, we wouldn't know!"

The Questions:

1. Who is your favorite Torah personality and why?

A: "My favorite Torah personality is Yehudit who saved her town of Bethulia during the time of the Maccabean revolt against Syrian oppression. Just as the men in her town were ready to surrender she reminded them that "if you truly have faith in G-d you must never give up your trust in Him". She took it upon herself to charm and trick the Greek General Holofernes and eventually beheaded him leading to the defeat of his army and victory for the Jews in her town. This story teaches us two things: 1) No-one gets a job done like a fierce woman and 2) Don't get on a woman's bad side while there are sharp objects around."

2. What is your favorite snack food?

A: "Does wine on Shabbat qualify? There is something about settling down with my favorite people and my family (Just kidding! My favorite people are my family.) after a hectic week and enjoying the Kiddish. After a week of constant go and hustle, that calm after the storm is invaluable."

3. What is your personal motto?

A: "As cliché as the saying may be, I often use the quote, "Be the change you want to see in the world". It is easy to complain about the people and world around us and accept it as status quo but sometimes all it takes is being the positive force in a situation to transform everyone and everything around us for the better."

4. What inspires you?

A: "What inspires me are people who are indiscriminately happy no matter what they are facing. It is a huge Mitzvah to be happy but for many it is easier said than done. I feel very inspired whenever I have the privilege of encountering or reading about amazing people who remain joyful and giving despite their unimaginable adversity."

Thank you, Jenn! Thanks for giving us some insight into what makes you tick!

Parashas Yisro

"And Moshe went up to G-d." The great event, toward which all of creation moved from the hour of its inception, was about to take place. The entire universe was hushed and attentive to the sublime drama that was about to unfold in the wilderness of Sinai. In view of the vivid circumstances surrounding the Divine Revelation, it is most disconcerting that its substance rapidly dissipated. For shortly after Sinai, the Hebrews create a golden calf and Moshe, learning of it from atop the mountain, shatters the tablets containing the Ten Commandments. What a magnificent beginning! What an abysmal ending!

Where in lay the difference between the first set of tablets, which were broken, and the second set, which Moshe later fashioned and which remained whole? Why were the latter more enduring? Why were they received in sincerity by the Jewish nation? Rashi comments that the first tablets, which were given amid tumult, thundering and a great assembly, were affected by the evil eye, whereas, the second tablets, which were given under more modest circumstances, were able to endure. There is nothing more beautiful than modesty. But while this teaching of Rashi contains a very important moral lesson, it still does not fully explain the circumstances surrounding the second tablets.

Why did G-d command Moshe to hew these second tablets instead of giving them to him ready-made from Above, as He had with the first pair? And if it was, for some reason, essential that Moshe hew them by himself, could he not have done so at the top of the mountain? Why did G-d instruct him to hew them at the foot of the mountain and carry them up to the top? It is precisely this incident that explains the durability of the second tablets.

The first tablets were given to Moshe ready-made by G-d. They were given from Above to be carried down. G-d made his revelation but the Jewish people were not spiritually prepared to fully appreciate and receive it. In a great moment of inspiration, they had exclaimed, "We will do and we will listen." But the moment passed. Backsliding was the result. Confusion and disgrace followed. The second tablets, on the other hand, were brought up from below. They were hewed by the hand of man. The Jewish people, purged and cleansed by the unfortunate incident of the Golden Calf and its aftermath, were, at this point, spiritually ready to receive the message of the tablets. They had prepared themselves for its reception. They elevated themselves to be suitable receptacles for the word of G-d. G-d inscribed the tablets, but Moshe prepared them and brought them up to be inscribed. These tablets could endure.

Frequently people complain, "Why is Judaism meaningless to me? It doesn't move me. I am not affected by its message. When I attend services, it leaves me cold. Nothing happens to me. The rabbi, the cantor do not inspire me sufficiently." These people mistakenly view religion as something external to themselves, as something separate and apart. They do not realize that one must prepare himself to receive the message of G-d. "Hew for yourself" – make yourself a proper receptacle to receive G-d's word. Then it will affect you. Attending services is not like attending a show or theater. Services require active participation, not merely passive observation. The rabbi and cantor cannot pray and be devout for you. Prepare your own tablets and ascend the mountain. Then G-d will inscribe his word upon them.

PARSHAS YISRO: First Speak to the Women

The role of women in society has certainly evolved over time. The women's rights movements over the 20th century led to increased equality and greater personal freedom and opportunity for women. The knowledge, creativity and expertise that women bring to the forefront of society is both sizeable and substantial.

However, as with every major social revolution, the women's rights movements brought along new challenges that are more apparent with the passage of time. The growing expectations of women to have both a successful career and raise a family often leads to having to choose between one or the other, they are left feeling that they are not a success. The institution of marriage and raising a family is no longer assumed, and often not prioritized, creating a negative ripple in society.

The Torah, which is eternal and speaks to every generation, has much to say on how and when to balance and embrace new values, how to properly grow and evolve without losing our core values and what we stand for.

As evidenced in this week's Torah portion, Jewish wisdom views the woman as the central figure in Jewish life and continuity. The Jews were standing in front of Mount Sinai about to receive the Torah and God tells Moshe, "Ko tomar l'beit Yaakov" – I want you to speak to the women – first. First approach the women and find out if they are interested in receiving the Torah. If so, then the men will surely follow suit.

Jewish women are the ultimate guardians of Judaism. The determining factor of a person's affiliation with the Jewish people is dependent on the mother. If a person's mother is Jewish, then the person is born a Jew. This itself indicates the woman's primary role in preserving Jewish identity and values. With their warmth and understanding, they are entrusted to give over Jewish tradition to the next generation. As the wisest of all men put it in Proverbs (1,8) "Listen my son, to the discipline of your father, and do not forsake the Torah of your mother." The Torah, Jewish wisdom, values and tradition, are transmitted to the next generation through the mother's love, intellect and dedication.

A Jewish woman is referred to as 'akeret habayit', the "mainstay of the home." It is she who largely determines the spiritual atmosphere of the home, which in Jewish tradition is a mini sanctuary, a place where one is nourished physically and spiritually. Modern psychologists are affirming more and more what the Torah has always taught us: that a secure and loving home built on solid moral and ethical values is a basic building block of society.

The role of women is truly unique and multifaceted; women are responsible for transmitting Jewish tradition to the next generation and keeping Jewish values alive. This delicate balance of the woman's role within the physical and spiritual realms of life and the measure of success that is infused within this role is truly a determining factor of the future and success of the Jewish people.
