Coat Room Cleanout Completed!

Thank you to those who removed their personal items from the coatroom in the lobby prior to the Cleanout.

Items that remained were placed in the "Lost and Found." If you discover that you are missing anything – coats, scarves, shoes, pets, gloves, etc. – contact the office to reclaim your stuff!

Minyan Minute:

What is "Minyan Minute"? The Minyan Minute provides insight to our members about our minyanim. The goal is to enlighten, educate, and motivate others to join us. Please come and fulfill the important mitzvah of praying with a minyan. You will be surprised by the unexpected benefits.

"Please come and fulfill the important mitzvah of praying with a minyan."

"It's definitely better to pray with a minyan in shul than with a minyan at home (except for shiva)",

"It's definitely better to pray without a minyan in shul than without a minyan at home", based on Talmud and Shulchan Aruch.

"praying with a minyan is beautiful for your soul"

"the minyan is the most democratic grouping, where all are equally important, irrespective of their other stations in life"

"it gives the youngest 13 year old, the same status as a 113 year old. what other institution does that." onwards and upwards...daven with a minyan and be counted and elevated.

Parashas Bo

Pharaoh's behavior during the ten plagues seems incomprehensible. During several plagues, Pharaoh capitulates and agrees to let the Jewish people leave Egypt. Yet as soon as each plague ends Pharaoh recants – even though he knows that his stubbornness will result in further punishment for Egypt. Equally unfathomable is the indifference of the Egyptian population toward the exhortations of Moshe. After accurately predicting six plagues of doom, Moshe forewarns the people of the upcoming hail and tells them not to leave their slaves and animals out in the fields, lest they be killed. Nonetheless, the Torah reports, many Egyptians did just that and their slaves and livestock perished. What accounted for their stubbornness?

The Kotzker Rebbe makes a striking observation. "Pharaoh rose in the night," the Torah reports, and Rashi comments that he rose from his bed. Imagine: after enduring nine terrible plagues, Moshe warns Pharaoh that at midnight every firstborn in the country would die. Pharaoh completely ignores this prophecy and goes to sleep! How could he be so relaxed in the face of such compelling danger? Seven days after this plague, another remarkable incident occurs. In perhaps the greatest miracle of human history, G-d splits the waters of the Red Sea, and the Jewish people pass through. The Egyptian army follows, and to nobody's surprise, G-d brings the waters crashing down on them. Why did the Egyptians think that G-d, who had been defending the Jewish people all along, would suspend the waters' onslaught for the benefit of the Jews' enemies?

The Torah explains the mentality of Pharaoh and the Egyptian people simply: They "did not take to heart the word of G-d." Human beings are given the capacity to ignore even the most obvious truths, something psychologists call "denial." With powerful symbolism, the ninth plague of darkness reflects this irrational behavior in the Egyptians. The Rabbis tell us that when a Jew visited an Egyptian home, there was light for the Jew and darkness for the Egyptian. The very same spot was both light and dark, depending on the viewer's perception. The Jew saw the hand of G-d clearly revealed, but the Egyptian remained in the dark, seeing nothing at all. Thus, the plague of darkness preceded the final blow, providing the key psychological insight into the mental blindness that prevailed in Egypt.

There is an important lesson to be learned from these events: We all have traces of Pharaoh's personality lingering within us. We, too, sometimes deny self-evident truths and close our eyes to blatant realities. Rabbi Moshe Chaim Luzatto, in his classic work of Jewish ethics, Mesilas Yesharim, instructs every human being to ask himself the question, "Mah chovosi ba'olami" What is my obligation in life? Why did G-d create me with unique talents and abilities? What is the purpose of my existence? This inquiry is fundamental, yet many people live out their lives never once having pondered this question and its implications. If the behavior of Pharaoh and the Egyptian people strikes us as absurd, perhaps we should look at ourselves and become inspired to open our souls, to see the light of the Almighty which illuminates the entire world.

THE SISTERHOOD SCOOP

JANUARY 20

Volume 7

Number 3

10 Shevat 5784

January 20, 2024

Book Club Meets Monday

The Sisterhood Book Club  will meet this Monday, January 22, 7:15-8:45 PM at the home of Sharon Summers in Richmond Heights. Please RSVP for the address and directions. Contact Sharon at 314-285-1687, or email summers8032@gmail.com, or for more info, call Fran Alper at 314-993-4024, or email: fran.alper@outlook.com or sisterhood@nhbz.org.

The group will discuss the book Kirkus reviews described as "Brilliantly readable... Readers will be enthralled throughout by the fierce logic of Horn's arguments, novelty of research, black humor, and sharp phrasing... A riveting, radical, essential revision of the stories we all know — and some we don't."

The book has the controversial title, People Love Dead Jews: Reports from a Haunted Present by Dara Horn, but is a thoughtful, well-written, and highly engaging read. Come join us!

PARSHAS Bo: Really Big

The stubbornness of Par-oh in the face of almost one year of devastating plagues is unparalleled in human history. To simply say he hardened his heart sheds no light on the weakness in his character that would blind him to the path of submission that would have saved his country from disaster.

The Torah states that when Par-oh entered his palace, he suddenly had a change of heart and would reject the demands of Moshe and Aharon for freedom for the Jews. "And he came into his house and did not concern his heart with this [warning] either". Shemot 7:15 Rabenu Bahye adds that the wicked king Nebuchadnezzar was also proud of his palace and therefore became haughty.

The question is: These monarchs had fame, success, and power – Why did their palace make them conceited when they had so much else of which to be proud? The lesson is that arrogance is not an intellectual response, but instead an emotional one. A beautiful home with its opulent décor aroused feelings of ga-avah – arrogance – more that wealth and power did intellectually.

We live in a society where exterior trappings define the man. Clothing – cars – and big-boy toys define a person to friends and neighbors more than the real person does. More dangerous is the fact that these not so meaningful possessions transform the way one looks at oneself as well. A simple man surrounded by lavish trappings sees a distorted self-image that may very well lead to haughty behavior beyond one's true worth as a human being and as a member of society. Wrong decisions and poor choices are sure to follow the blindness of conceit.

The Jewish home has been a paradigm for an environment conducive to spiritual growth and boundless self-improvement through the ages. Even the wicked prophet Bil-am praised, "Ma tovu ohalekha Yisrael – How goodly are your tents Israel" as he perused the modest lifestyle of our ancestors. We should all take a close look at our priorities and re-establish our homes as a beautiful environment to nurture ourselves and our children in a life of happiness and contentment steeped in Torah values.

A Religion of Memory

"There is a fundamental difference between living with the past and living in the past. Judaism is a religion of memory. We remember the exodus annually, even daily. But we do so for the sake of the future, not the past."
